Ceily Moore is a dedicated and experienced educator determined to improve in and out of school experiences for youth to ensure opportunities to thrive. She worked for several years as an elementary teacher, focusing primarily on math and science curriculum, differentiating instruction as needed for individual student's learning success. Moore balanced her focus on scholar academic achievement - aligning lessons to standards and organizing a school-wide tutoring plan, while also addressing behavioral and attendance concerns through interventions and incentive programs.

In her other roles since teaching, Moore has continued in her dedication to youth education and outreach. Her highly organized approach and understanding of the use of data have helped her in her roles in education and social service organizations. Her contract work in program and project planning has been collaborative in nature, often focusing on cultural responsiveness and addressing trauma-informed teaching practices.

Moore earned her B.S. in Health Science from Howard University in Washington D.C. and completed her Master of Education in Youth Development from the University of Illinois at Chicago. She will be pursuing her PhD, focusing on culturally responsive practices.
