

Dyve'a Robinson

Dyve'a joined PIE to gain professional experience in a field involving statistics and data with hopes to better help the communities around her. Dyve'a graduated from North Lawndale College Prep-Collins Campus on the west side of Chicago. While in high school Dyve'a took advantage of the opportunity to take college classes at Malcolm X and Harold Washington College, which gave her the motivation to attend and persist through college. Now, Dyve'a is a junior at Illinois State University in Bloomington-Normal, IL, majoring in Criminal Justice.

Over her short years of working, Dyve'a has gained experience in many different industries in her desire to learn a variety of skills to apply to her life professionally and personally. Most notably, her first job as a youth assistant at a daycare taught her patience, strong interpersonal and problem-solving skills, the importance of communication, and most importantly helping children. She has become extremely passionate about helping people and learning new things. In her free time, Dyve'a writes fictional and inspirational short stories with hopes to one day be a published author with the ultimate goal of supporting her community and being an asset to those in need.
